Homebuilt House A Vernacular Of Uncertainty:

Homebuilt House Dennis Fukai, 2014-06-01 Often thought of as squatters the photographs are of houses assembled by untutored builders on land that others feel they have no right to occupy The objective of the research was to document the work of these builders and the methods used to complete their constructions Without a plan and with no way to predict what the next step might be in their constructions small and simple shelters were seen on a timeline to evolve almost imperceptibly according to an intuitive approach to survival in a very uncertain world The results are the distinctly disordered characteristics of the vernacular seen in the photographs in this book features that are a direct reflection of an underlying culture of uncertainty This is a house form that begins by ignoring any preconception of style or design anticipating shape and purpose only as it is defined by a material held in hand pieced together strategically without a plan or schedule As such every dwelling is a tentative solution to a continuously evolving physical form Arts & Humanities constructing the different styles Green Living Copyright Libri GmbH All rights reserved The Little Big House Nathaniel Morgan Hammatt, 2011 The research will focus on identifying the design principles found in the Cape Cod house The goal is to utilize the design principles to create a sustainable response to the single family home in New England Through analysis of existing documentation and first hand observation a definition of the Cape Cod house can be developed and shown how it may be a relevant precedent for resolving the contemporary problem This study is not intended to promote a particular means of habitation one that could be seen as sustainable This study hopes to provide an option within the context of current cultural mores that is more comprehensive than other existing methods and one that can be adopted immediately The design principles found in the Cape Cod house can provide a framework for building sustainable accessible single family houses that satisfy the cultural drivers that define the qualities of home Handmade Homes Art Boericke, Barry Shapiro, 1981-01-01

Framing a Life, Building a House Eileen Sypher, 2010-07-23 What does it mean to build a house How can it change a life What happens if the builder is a woman a teacher and a writer a woman unaccustomed to tools How does such a woman come to build at all What happens then if that first house whose every nail is known is sold How does one leave such a house leave and go on to build another This is a building story but more it is a story of a woman builder and those without whom she could not have built It is about how building changed not only that woman but also her sense of what a house is how she came to know that building houses of wood builds the house of the spirit
