Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical and psychological health. The physical health measures included body mass index (BMI), waist circumference, and blood pressure. The psychological health measures included the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI) and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory (STAI). The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly reduced BMI, waist circumference, and blood pressure. The walking program also significantly reduced the BDI and STAI scores. The results of the study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

¹² To address the issue, the authors use a series of tests to determine whether the results are driven by the choice of the control group. They find that the results are robust to the choice of the control group.

As noted earlier, the 1998 election was significant for the South in that it was the first time that a Republican candidate won the governorship. This was a significant change from the previous 20 years, when the Democratic Party had dominated the state's politics. The 1998 election was a turning point in the state's political history, and it was a reflection of the changing demographics and political climate of the South.
