A large triangular network diagram composed of smaller triangles and nodes. The diagram is a Sierpinski triangle, a fractal that is a self-similar geometric figure. It is constructed by starting with a large equilateral triangle, dividing it into four smaller equilateral triangles, and then removing the central triangle. This process is repeated for each of the three remaining triangles. The diagram is composed of 10 nodes (small circles) and 15 edges (lines connecting the nodes). The nodes are arranged in a triangular pattern: the top row has 1 node, the second row has 2 nodes, the third row has 3 nodes, and the bottom row has 4 nodes. The edges connect the nodes in a way that forms a series of smaller triangles within the larger triangle.

Eggers, 2005-06-22 A fundamental but mostly hidden transformation is happening in the way public services are being delivered and in the way local and national governments fulfill their policy goals Government executives are redefining their core responsibilities away from managing workers and providing services directly to orchestrating networks of public private and nonprofit organizations to deliver the services that government once did itself Authors Stephen Goldsmith and William D Eggers call this new model governing by network and maintain that the new approach is a dramatically different type of endeavor that simply managing divisions of employees Like any changes of such magnitude it poses major challenges for those in charge Faced by a web of relationships and partnerships that increasingly make up modern governance public managers must grapple with skill set issues managing a contract to capture value technology issues incompatible information systems communications issues one partner in the network for example might possess more information than another and cultural issues how interplay among varied public private and nonprofit sector cultures can create unproductive dissonance Governing by Network examines for the first time how managers on both sides of the aisle public and private are coping with the changes Drawing from dozens of case studies as well as established best practices the authors tell us what works and what doesn't Here is a clear roadmap for actually governing the networked state for elected officials business executives and the broader public      Networks and Collaboration in the Public Sector Joris

The End of Government... as We Know it: Making Public Policy Work Elaine Ciulla Kamarck, 2024-11-01 In the last decades of the 20th century many political leaders declared that government was in the words of Ronald Reagan the problem not the solution But on closer inspection argues Elaine Kamarck the revolt against government was and is a revolt against bureaucracy a revolt that has taken place in first world developing and avowedly communist countries alike To some this looks like the end of government Kamarck however counters that what we are seeing is the replacement of the traditional bureaucratic approach with new models more in keeping with the information age economy The End of Government explores the emerging contours of this new postbureaucratic state the sequel to government as we know it considering What forms will it take Will it work in all policy arenas Will it serve democratic ideals more effectively than did the bureaucratic state of the previous century Perhaps most significantly how will leadership be redefined in these new circumstances Kamarck's provocative work makes it clear that in addition to figuring out what to do today's government leaders face an unprecedented number of options when it comes to how to do things The challenge of government increasingly will be to choose an implementation mode match it to a policy problem and manage it well in the postbureaucratic world
