We All Feel Barbara J. King, 2013-12-13 From the time of our earliest childhood encounters with animals we casually ascribe familiar emotions to them though scientists have long cautioned against such anthropomorphizing Recently however things have begun to shift in the other direction and anthropologist Barbara J King is at the forefront of that movement arguing strenuously that we can and should attend to animal emotions In the stories she tells here King relays how some farm animals horses goats chickens and ducks bond with others and engage in mourning

when their friends die Here too dolphins and whales exhibit striking signs of suffering over the loss of babies and companions a mother dolphin will not give up her dead baby and whales risk stranding themselves in small groups rather than abandon kin As part of a larger web of life death love and loss King calls our attention to emotions both our own and those of our companion species Animal Grief David Alderton, 2011-12-15 Science is now providing some remarkable insights into animal behavior with crocodiles for example emerging as devoted parents and elephants like whales able to communicate with each other across long distances by ultrasound which is inaudible to our ears There seems little doubt that animals experience a range of emotions just as we do but can they grieve too David Alderton award winning multi million specialist animal author contends that emotions including grief can potentially have a survival value for a species The authoritative rational text is superbly supported by interesting sensitive photographs carefully chosen to be reflective of the subject matter Unique subject matter drawing on the latest research Covers both domestic and wild animals A subject that has intrigued pet owners for many years Fascinating insights into the natural world Insights into how grieving may help wild animals to survive How this could affect conservation planning Sensitive rational approach to the subject The impact on pet owners and their animals Written by an award winning multi million selling specialist animal author A book with widespread appeal for anyone with an interest in the natural world
