Porter Square: A Mystery (Complete) Benjamin Leopold Farjeon,2020-09-28 MRS JAMES PREEDY lodging house keeper bred and born in the vocation and consequently familiar with all the moves of that extensive class of persons in London that has no regular home and has to be cooked for washed for and generally done for sat in the kitchen of her house No 118 Great Porter Square This apartment was situated in the basement and here Mrs Preedy received her friends and did for her lodgers in so far as the cooking for them can be said to be included in that portentous and significant term The floor of the kitchen was oil clothed with in distinguished places strips of carpet of various patterns and colours to give it an air Over the mantelpiece was a square looking glass in a mahogany frame ranged on each side of which were faded photographs of men women and children and of one gentleman in particular pretending to smoke a long pipe This individual whose face was square whose aspect was frowning and whose shirt sleeves were tucked up in an exceedingly free and easy fashion was the pictorial embodiment of Mrs Preedy's deceased husband While he lived he was a worryer my dear to quote Mrs Preedy and to do the lady justice he looked it but being gone to that bourne from which no lodging house keeper ever returns he immediately took his place in the affections of his widow as the dear departed and a blessed angel Thus do we often find tender appreciation budding into flower even at the moment the undertaker nails the lid upon the coffin and Mr Preedy when the breath was out of his body might spiritually have consoled himself with the reflection that he was not the only person from whose grave hitherto unknown or unrecognised virtues ascend The weapons of the dead warrior two long and two short pipes were ranged crosswise on the wall with mathematical tenderness When her day s work was over and Mrs Preedy a lonely widow sat by herself in the kitchen she was wont to look regretfully at those pipes wishing that he who had smoked them were alive to puff again as of yore forgetting in the charity of her heart the crosses and vexations of her married life and how often she had called her blessed angel a something I decline to mention for defiling the kitchen with his filthy smoke The other faded photographs of men women and children represented three generations of Mrs Preedy s relations They were not a handsome family family portraits as a rule when the sun is the painter are not remarkable for beauty but these were a worse lot than usual In their painful anxiety to exhibit themselves in a favourable light Mrs Preedy s relations had leered and stared to such a degree that it must have been no easy matter for them to get their features back into their natural shape after the photographer in the City Road was done with them To make things worse they were in their Sunday clothes and if they had just been going into the penitentiary they could not have looked more unhappy and uncomfortable
