

"REFLECTIONS"
A One-Act Play For Reflections At Thanksgiving
Presented At
MICHAEL KUTLER ELEMENTARY

SCENE: SANDY's bedroom in Somewhere, USA. It is typically furnished complete with a bed, a few stuffed animals, chest of drawers, posters, computer, school books, study-buddy pillow, television and the like. There is a door stage left that leads downstairs to the rest of her house. Prominently placed upstage is a small chair and vanity with a frame representing the mirror thru which SANDY TOO will speak to our twelve year old heroine, SANDY.

ALL RISE: The room is empty. After a moment, SANDY TOO, SANDY's reflection in the mirror, pops up from behind the vanity. From inside the mirror and frame, SHE peers about.

SANDY TOO

Now, where is that girl? She's usually up here by now checking her Instagram, studying, re-doing' some music, or texting away. You know, I'm worried about Sandy. I've wanted to say something to her for years. But people don't like it much when their reflection in the mirror talks back to them. Usually they scream and freak out or just chalk it up to being tired when you speak to them. They never listen anyway. Of course, she talks to me all the time. She prongs for me, rips into her hair curling iron for me, and is constantly asking me questions. Yesterday, she wanted to know the secret of life! I wanted to tell her what I know but I didn't dare. It's so plain and simple yet since the beginning of time we have searched high and low for what is right in front of us. Believe me, I have a lot of time to kill being stuck in this mirror so I've looked into this. And every bit of mythology, science and philosophy research I've done always points me back to a simple truth that anybody may know.
