Houses Framing Life Kathy McClure:

Houses Kathy McClure, 2015-12-21 The 1960s was the time of Viet Nam and Woodstock men walking on the moon and free love It was a time of pulling away from old traditions and a foreshadowing of what was to come for women's rights For many it was an exciting time of infinite possibilities For girls in Utah the choices were few besides marriage and motherhood Kathy lived in Salt Lake City during that restless time but she wanted more than what was expected She dreamed of a college degree an exciting career in Archaeology and most of all Billy the high school boy who had captured her heart But life and fate had different plans taking her on a twisted and sometimes lonely detour a journey of places and people of family and children and forbidden love Along the way she realized that each place she lived each house she inhabited taught her something and each took something away She traded a university dormitory for a tiny castaway house where untried and inexperienced she struggled to become a wife and learned to be a mother Then she moved to the edge the edge of the desert the edge of adulthood where she forged bonds with young friends but came face to face with the fragility of life and death's dark permanence In the valley of the golden trees she discovered beauty was deceiving and the people and creatures who lived there could be both noble and cruel Through the struggle to hold on to what was hers to keep her home and her life she fought those forces and in the effort found her strength and her voice And finally before her 30th birthday she came back to the beginning back to the city where she was born and the view of the mountains she loved and her long ago dreams

that at stake in the aesthetic turn of these works was not only the theorization of aesthetic experience but also an engagement with political arguments and debates about available modes of sociability and sexual expression To track these engagements its author Dana Seitler performs a method she calls lateral reading a mode of interpretation that moves horizontally through various historical entanglements and across the fields of the arts to make sense of and see in a new light their connections challenges and productive frictions Each chapter takes a different art form as its object sculpture portraiture homecraft and opera These art forms appear in some of the major works of literature of the period central to negotiations of gender race and sexuality including those by Henry James Davis Willa Cather Du Bois Sarah Orne Jewett and Mary Wilkins Freeman But the literary texts that each chapter of this book takes as its motivation not only include a specific art form or object as central to its politics they also build an alternative aesthetic vocabulary through which they seek to alter challenge or participate in the making of social and sexual life By cultivating a counter aesthetics of the unfinished the uncertain the small the low and the allusive these fictions recognize other ways of knowing and being than those oriented toward reductively gendered accounts of beauty classed imperatives established by the norms of taste or apolitical treatises of sexual disinterestedness And within them and through reading sideways we can witness the coming into legibility of a set of diffuse practices that provide a pivot point for engaging the political methods of minoritized subjects at the turn of the twentieth century
