The first book length study to analyze how race informs gender in terms of patterns of office holding Gender Race and Office Holding in the United States provides insight into both underrepresentation in general as well as the underlying dynamics of representation within specific groups of

Nowhere to Run Christian Dyogi Phillips,2021 Why has the underrepresentation of women and racial minorities in elected office proved so persistent Many researchers have asserted that the main shortfall happens at the candidacy stage women and people of color are competitive candidates but too few throw their hat into the ring However these studies are animated by two assumptions that tend to speak past each other On the one hand gender and politics scholars often suggest that women lack sufficient ambition to run for office relative to men On the other hand race and politics scholars have suggested that districts with majority white populations do not provide adequate resources or opportunities for minority candidates to succeed These approaches tend to treat women and racial minorities as parallel social groups and fail to account for the ways in which race and gender simultaneously shape candidacy Nowhere to Run introduces the intersectional model of electoral opportunity which argues that descriptive representation in elections is shaped by intersecting processes related to race and gender Across states realistic opportunities for potential candidates of color to get on state legislative ballots are sharply circumscribed by the distribution of white majority populations in most districts and within the districts that are most widely viewed as winnable seats majority minority districts the perceived scarcity of viable electoral opportunities exacerbates factors that tend to push women of color farther from the candidate pipeline These overlapping constraints result in an electoral landscape where women of color face constraints on electoral opportunity that are intersecting and multilayered Drawing on an original dataset encompassing nearly every state legislative general election
