Happy House Betsey Riddle,Freifrau von Hutten zum Stolzenberg,2013 Happy House Happy House was a big old house with rooms on both sides of the door and a good many bedrooms but it was old fashioned in the wrong way like a man s straw hat say of the early seventies It was inconvenient without being picturesque There was only one bathroom and the passages were narrow Most of the children had been born there indeed all of them except Paul for the prudent Mrs Walbridge had bought it out of the proceeds of her first book Queenie s Promise a book that is even now dear to thousands of romantic hearts in obscure homes Paul had been born in the little house at Tooting Bec for there it was that the Great Success had been written In those days might have been seen walking under the fine trees of the common a little dowdy figure with a bustle and flowing unhygienic draperies that was the newly married Mrs Ferdinand Walbridge in the throes of literary invention But just before the birth of Maud Evelyn the removal had been made the hastily gathered inexpensive household gods had been carried by the faithful Carter Paterson to Walpole Road and set up in their over large rather dwarfing shrine Those were the days of limitless ambition and mad rosy dreams when Ferdinand was still regarded by his young wife much in the way that Antony Trollope s heroines worshipped their husbands a short time before The romantic light of the runaway match still hung round him and his extraordinary good looks filled her with unweakened pride They hung up Mr Watts s Hope the beautiful and touching Soul s Awakening which indeed bore a certain resemblance to Walbridge at that time she arranged her little odds and ends of china and her few books that her father had sent her after the half hearted reconciliation following Paul s birth and one of the first things they bought was a gilt clock representing two little cupids on a see saw Mrs Walbridge s taste was bad but it was no worse than the taste of the greater part of her contemporaries of her own class for she belonged body and soul to the Philistines She hadn t even an artistic uncle clinging to the uttermost skirts of the pre Raphaelites to lighten her darkness and behold when she had made it her little kingdom looked good to her She settled down light heartedly and without misgivings to her quadruple r le of wife mother housekeeper and writer She had no doubt the delicate little creature of twenty but that she could manage and she had been managing ever since She managed to write those flowery sentimental books of hers in a room full of crawling experimental loud voiced babies she managed to break in a series of savage handmaidens who married as soon as she had taught them how to do their work she managed to make flowers grow in the shabby weed grown garden she managed to mend stair carpets to stick up fresh wallpapers to teach her children their prayers and how to read and write she managed to cook the dinner during the many servantless periods The fate of her high born hero and heroine tearing at her tender heart while that fabulous being the printer s devil waited in a metaphorical sense on her doorstep But most of all she managed to put up with Ferdinand She had loved him strongly and truly but she was a clear sighted little woman and she could not be fooled twice in the same way which from some points of view is a misfortune in a wife So gradually she found him out and with every bit of him that crumbled away something of herself crumbled too Nobody knew very much about those years for she was one of those rare women who have no confidante and she was too busy for much active mourning Ferdinand was an expensive luxury She worked every day and all day believed in her stories with a pathetic persistence cherishing all her press notices she pasted them in a large book and each one was carefully dated She had a large public and made a fairly large fairly regular income but there never was enough money because Walbridge not only speculated and gambled in every possible way but also required a great deal for his own personal comforts and luxuries For years it was the joy of the little woman s heart to dress him at one of the classic tailors in Savile Row his shirts and ties came from a Jermyn Street shop his boots from St James s Street and his gloves he had very beautiful hands were made specially for him in the Rue de Rivoli For many years Ferdinand Walbridge or Ferdie as he was called by a large but always changing circle of admiring friends was one of the most carefully dressed men in town He had an office somewhere in the city but his various attempts at business always failed sooner or later and then after each failure he would settle down gently and not ungratefully to a long period of what he called rest When the three elder children were eight six and three a very bad time had come to Happy House Little had been known about it except for the main fact that Mr Walbridge was made a bankrupt But Caroline Breeze the only woman who was anything like an intimate friend of the household knew that there was over and above this dreadful business a worse trouble
