Indiana's capital city doubled during this era necessitating expanded city planning vision to accommodate the growth. The downtown Governor's Circle parcel transformed from an ecclesiastical center into a commercial vortex centered by the enormous Soldier's and Sailors Monument. Many of the surrounding commercial developments were designed to create a compatible and uniform appearance. During these two decades several major iconic projects were completed including the Union Station, State Capitol Building, City Market, and the Athenaeum. The entrance into the 20th century supplemented these structures with cultural institutions including the Indiana Repertory Theatre, War Memorial Plaza, American Legion Headquarters, Murat Shrine, and Old National Center. The Scottish Rite Cathedral became one of the grandest and largest Masonic buildings globally. Walker's Theatre and the Circle Towers remain timeless examples of Art Deco design. During the latter two decades of the 20th century the historic downtown shopping district became integrated with fresh contemporary skyscrapers. The six-sided OneAmerica Tower was completed along with the Bank One Building in 1990, currently renamed as the Salesforce Tower to become the city's tallest high-rise. These additions have created an aesthetic equilibrium between classic and contemporary design.
