Never Such a Campaign Dan Welch, Kevin R. Pawlak, 2023-12-08 Historians Robert Orrison and Dan Welch follow Lee and Pope as they converge on ground once bloodied just thirteen months earlier In late June 1862 Gen Robert E Lee's Army of Northern Virginia drove back Maj Gen George McClellan's Army of the Potomac from the gates of the Confederate capital Richmond was safe at least for the moment Another threat soon emerged when the Army of Virginia a new command under Maj Gen John Pope moved toward Fredericksburg threatening Confederate communications supply points and Richmond Pope who had a reputation as something of a braggart had scored victories along the Mississippi River at New Madrid and Island No 10 President Lincoln was hopeful he would replicate that success in Virginia Pope brought with him a harder philosophy of war one that would put pressure not just on Lee's army but on the population of Virginia Alarmed and offended by such a miscreant as Pope Lee began moving part of his army north to counter and suppress the threat In Never Such a Campaign The Battle of Second Manassas August 28-30 1862 historians Dan Welch and Kevin R Pawlak follow Lee and Pope as they converge on ground bloodied just thirteen months earlier at First Bull Run Manassas Since then the armies had grown in both size and efficiency and any pitched combat between them promised to dwarf the earlier battle For the second summer in a row Union and Confederate forces clashed on the plains of Manassas This time the results would be far more terrible

Stay and Fight it Out Kristopher D. White, Chris Mackowski, 2023-10-22 Recounts the often overlooked fight that secured the Union position and set the stage for the Gettysburg battle's fateful final day July 1 1863 was a disaster for the Union army's XI Corps Shattered in battle north of the Pennsylvania town of Gettysburg the battered and embarrassed unit ended the day hunkered at the crest of a cemetery topped hill south of the village. Reinforcements fortified the position which extended eastward to include another key piece of high ground: Culp's Hill. The Federal line also extended southward down Cemetery Ridge, forming what eventually came to resemble a long fishhook. July 2 saw a massive Confederate attack against the southernmost part of the line. As the Southern juggernaut rolled inexorably northward, Federal troops shifted away from Culp's Hill and Cemetery Hill to meet the threat. Just then, part of the Army of Northern Virginia's vaunted Second Corps launched itself at the weakened Federal right. The very men who had broken the Union army the day before resolved to break it once again. The ensuing struggle, every bit as desperate and with stakes every bit as high as the more famous fight at Little Round Top on the far end of the line, imperiled the entire Union position. Stay and fight it out, one Union general counseled his peers. The Confederates were all too willing to oblige.

Authors Kristopher D. White and Chris Mackowski started their Gettysburg account in Fight Like the Devil: The First Day at Gettysburg, July 1, 1863 and continued it in Don't Give an Inch: The Second Day at Gettysburg, July 2, 1863. From Little Round Top to Cemetery Ridge, picking up on the heels of its companion volume Stay and Fight It Out: The Second Day at Gettysburg, July 2, 1863, Culp's Hill and the Northern End of the Battlefield recounts the often overlooked fight that secured the Union position and set the stage for the battle's fateful final day. — Don't Give an Inch, Daniel T. Davis, Chris Mackowski, Kristopher D. White, 2016-06-19

This vividly detailed Civil War history reveals many of the incredible true stories behind the legendary sites of the Gettysburg battlefield. Having unexpectedly been thrust into command of the Army of the Potomac only three days earlier, General George Gordon Meade was caught by a much harsher surprise when the Confederate Army of Northern Virginia launched a bold invasion northward. Outside the small college town of Gettysburg, the lead elements of Meade's army were suddenly under attack. By nightfall, they were forced to take a lodgment on high ground south of town. There they fortified and waited. Don't give an inch, boys, one Federal commander told his men. The next day, July 2, 1863, would be one of the Civil War's bloodiest. With names that have become legendary—Little Round Top, Devil's Den, the Peach Orchard, the Wheatfield, Culp's Hill—the second day at Gettysburg encompasses some of the best-known engagements of the Civil War. Yet those same stories have also become shrouded in mythology and misunderstanding. In Don't Give an Inch, Emerging Civil War historians Chris Mackowski and Daniel T. Davis peel back the layers to share the real and often overlooked stories of that fateful summer day. — Race to the Potomac, Bradley M. Gottfried, Linda I. Gottfried, 2025-08-05

Details the tense post-Gettysburg pursuit as Lee and Meade navigate danger and strategy, shaping the course of the Civil War. Even before the guns fell silent at Gettysburg, Robert E. Lee was preparing for the arduous task of getting his defeated Confederate army back safely into northern Virginia. It was an enormous, complex and exceedingly dangerous undertaking, all in a pouring rainstorm and all under the shadow of a possible attack from the Federal Army of the Potomac. Lee first needed to assemble two wagon trains: one to transport the wounded and the other to deliver the tons of supplies acquired by the army as it roamed across Pennsylvania and Maryland on the way to Gettysburg Once the wagon trains were set he mapped routes for his infantry and artillery on different roads to speed the journey and protect his command The victor of Gettysburg George Meade remained unsure of Lee's next move and dispatched Maj Gen John Sedgwick's VI Corps on a reconnaissance in force The thrust found the Confederate army in full retreat Lee was heading back to Virginia Meade launched a pursuit along different routes hoping to catch his beaten enemy without unduly exposing his own battle exhausted troops to a devastating counterattack or ambush Union cavalry moved out after the vulnerable Confederate wagon trains The encounters that followed including several engagements with Jeb Stuart's horsemen resulted in the loss of hundreds of vehicles the capture of large numbers of wounded and the seizure of tons of valuable supplies The majority of Lee's wagons reached Williamsport Maryland only to find the pontoon bridge had been cut loose by Union troops Lee's army meanwhile reached Hagerstown Maryland largely unscathed and erected a strong defensive line while racing to build a pontoon bridge across the swollen Potomac at Falling Waters Even as Meade hurriedly pursued Lee he sought opportunities to launch an attack that might crush Lee's army and even end the war once and for all

Bradley M Gottfried and Linda I Gottfried share the high stakes story of Gettysburg's aftermath in Race to the Potomac Lee and Meade After Gettysburg July 4-14 1863 Lincoln Comes to Gettysburg Bradley M. Gottfried, Linda I. Gottfried, 2021-08-18 New York Times Bestselling Author The story of the battle's aftermath the burial of the dead and Lincoln's appearance to make a few appropriate remarks Almost 8 000 dead dotted the fields of Gettysburg after the guns went silent The Confederate dead were hastily buried but what of the Union dead Several men hatched the idea of a new cemetery to bury and honor the Union soldiers just south of town Their task was difficult to say the least After the State of Pennsylvania purchased seventeen acres a renowned landscape architect designed the cemetery's layout All was now ready for the bodies to be taken from their uneasy resting places around the battlefield placed in coffins marked with their names and units and transported to the new cemetery to be permanently reinterred More than 3 500 men were moved to the Soldiers National Cemetery As these tasks gained momentum so too did planning for the cemetery's consecration or dedication A committee of agents from each state that had lost men in battle worked out the logistics Most of the program was easily decided it would be composed of odes singing prayers and remarks by the nation's most renowned orator Edward Everett The committee argued over whether President Abraham Lincoln should be invited to the ceremony and if so his role in the program Divided by politics it decided on a middle ground inviting the president to provide a few appropriate remarks To the surprise of many he accepted the invitation for the most part crafted his remarks in the Executive Mansion and headed to Gettysburg arriving on the evening of November 18 1863 The town was filled with thousands expecting to witness the event of the century The next day Lincoln mounted a horse to join the procession heading for the cemetery The program was unremarkable except for Lincoln's remarks whose reception was split along party lines Lincoln Comes to Gettysburg The Creation of the Soldiers National Cemetery and Lincoln's Gettysburg Address recounts the events in vivid historical detail
