

10. Explain the importance of the following factors in the design of a research study:

(a) Sample size: The sample size is the number of subjects or units included in the study. A larger sample size generally leads to more precise estimates and greater statistical power to detect true effects. However, a sample size that is too large can be wasteful and costly, and may also lead to overfitting in statistical models.

(b) Randomization: Randomization is the process of assigning subjects to different groups or treatments in a way that is unbiased and independent of any other factors. This helps to ensure that the results of the study are due to the treatment being tested, rather than to other confounding factors.

(c) Blinding: Blinding is the process of preventing subjects, researchers, or both from knowing which group or treatment they are in. This helps to reduce bias in the study, as knowledge of the treatment assignment can influence the results.

(d) Control group: A control group is a group of subjects that does not receive the treatment being tested. This group is used to compare the results of the treatment group to a baseline, and helps to control for any confounding factors that may affect the results.
