country's ambition since independence to rid the nation of three archenemies poverty ignorance and disease Structural transformation has been extremely limited with agriculture still dominating the economy a non diversified economy that hampers flexibility to withstand shock occurrences Nonetheless the country intensified macroeconomic policy reforms significantly stabilizing the economy with falling inflation levels climbing foreign exchange reserves and an overall fiscal balance But the main factors identified behind the slow development progress are primarily inadequate capital accumulation and productivity growth poor support for the transformation of agriculture disrupted progress in building human capital and delayed demographic transition However the steady progress in reorienting its economy to a market based operation is creating space for exploiting the large potential of private sector initiative It is emphasized that growth will only be sustainable if firmly rooted in exploiting the domestic resource base international competitiveness and an aggressive pursuit of new export opportunities Publisher description
