Context

- Science is "Theory of Evolution" was controversial, and some Hyde is presented as an scientific creation. It made him more aware of the human condition.
- Science was fascinated by the supernatural and mysterious in Victorian society, and its progress brought the danger of the repression of science in order to control the supernatural.
- Science had a dualistic philosophy which meant the good and evil was separate, which influenced the novel.
- The Victorian era was a period of rapid change, bringing fear of the unknown which created Hyde, as a primitive species, seemed more out of place.

- Jekyll and Hyde are binary opposites, suggesting we can only understand Hyde's evilness by understanding the goodness in Jekyll.
- The nature of their relationship gives the novel its power.
- Jekyll appears to be a good, respectable, responsible gentleman whereas Hyde is "pure evil".
- Jekyll behaves in a way that is socially acceptable as he is aware of how people view him, contrasting Hyde who is uncontrollable and acts with strongly immoral behaviour.
- "He was terrified utterly over the child's body and felt her screaming"
- This is the first insight into the evilness of Hyde.
- The juxtaposition of the words "terrified" and "screaming" shows the extent of how easily Hyde acts in this way.
- Children are seen as innocent and therefore it emphasises how immoral these actions are, and yet he shows no remorse or remorse.
- "There is something wrong with his appearance, something distasteful, something downright repellent"
- Repetition of the phrase "something" emphasises the obscurity as Hyde escapes description and is left to the imagination of the reader.
 - This is important because it gives a personal connection with the reader which demonstrates how there is an evil side, the Hyde, in everyone, which links to Stevenson's upbringing.
- It may hint that it isn't the physical appearance of Hyde that is wrong, but his inner-self and soul which makes him appear so evil.

 - Despite knowing there was something going on, he wouldn't act on it as he doesn't want Jekyll's name to be ruined.
- "An impression of such silent horror and despair, as those the very blood of the two gentlemen"
- He experienced something very strange.
 - Unexplained events, such as this one, add to the tension in gothic novels and leave part of the story to the reader's imagination.
 - Utterson is extremely affected by just the "glimpse" he had seen, leaving him in "terror".
- "A good deal frightened and rather inclined to be inhibited in conversation"
- Utterson was a rational gentleman and is more comfortable dealing with facts than emotions.
 - He wants to try and find a rational explanation - he believes Jekyll has an illness that changed his appearance and caused him to separate himself from society.
 - Despite what he has found out, he remains non-judgemental towards Jekyll's behaviour.
