ABSTRACT

Background: Decision-makers and health professionals face challenges in providing quality medical services while optimizing diminishing resources. Health literacy is associated with health outcomes and health system costs and influences the way in which communication is managed in the health system. Objective: This study examined the association between the level of health literacy of service providers in the community, their awareness of health literacy, their attitudes toward health literacy promotion, and the way in which they communicate with patients with low health literacy. Methods: A cross-sectional analytic study was conducted among 50 physicians and 50 administrative staff members in community clinics of the Maccabi Health Maintenance Organization in Israel. Key Results: Significant positive associations were found ( $p < .05$ ) between the level of health literacy, the attitudes toward health literacy promotion, and the degree to which special communication techniques were used when treating patients with low health literacy. Significant associations were found ( $p < .01$ ) between the level of awareness, as well as the attitudes toward health literacy promotion and the degree to which communication techniques were applied. Higher health literacy is associated with more favorable attitudes toward health literacy promotion. Additionally, a significant positive association ( $p < .01$ ) was found between the attitudes toward health literacy promotion and the use of communication techniques. No mediation was found among the research variables. Conclusions: To the best of our knowledge, this is the first study that examines health literacy among physicians. The results indicate gaps in the awareness of, and attitudes toward, health literacy among community health care providers, thus suggesting the need for developing and applying guidelines for improving efforts of health system providers regarding health literacy and for applying recommended tools for health communication. JHLRP: Health Literacy Research and Practice. 2021;5(3):e194–e200.

Plain Language Summary: This study examined the link between the health literacy of health care providers (e.g., physicians, service administrators), their awareness and attitudes toward health literacy promotion, and how they communicate with patients with low health literacy. The findings showed significant and positive relationships between these aspects of health literacy as well as gaps in the health care system that need to be addressed.

Finding the balance between maintaining quality medical services and the optimal use of diminishing resources constitutes present and future challenges for decision-makers and clinical health professionals. Cooperation between service providers and patients is necessary for the success of treatment interventions (Berkman et al., 2011;

Castro et al., 2016). Interactive treatment protocols based on communication that encourage self-management and empowerment of patients have been proven efficient and economical (Castro et al., 2016). Health literacy is an essential component related to effective communication in the health system, with significant ramifications on people's health and Health Literacy in Clinical Practice and Public Health Elliot R. Siegel, 2020-06-15 Health literacy is the ultimate global currency of health and well being Without health literacy medicine fails public health fails and people pay the cost for these failures with their lives As this book goes to press the world is confronted by the COVID 19 pandemic Improving health literacy becomes increasingly important if we are to successfully confront the challenges that stress our systems of medicine and public health like never before Richard H Carmona M D M P H FACS former Surgeon General of the United States in his foreword to this book Two years ago HTI published the book Health Literacy New Directions in Research Theory and Practice Together with that earlier volume this book Health Literacy in Clinical Practice and Public Health New Initiatives and Lessons Learned at the Intersection with other Disciplines strives to enumerate and expand our understanding of the multidisciplinary connections which underpin the field of health literacy The book's balance between research and practice is a response to the feedback the editors received about the previous publication which focused more on HL theory and research With reports of specific health literacy research initiatives and interventions particularly in clinical practice and public health the book covers contemporary health literacy research and practice and is divided into three sections Section one explores health literacy's capacity to foster progress in clinical practice and public health section two provides insights into health literacy initiatives and lessons learned from diverse healthcare stakeholders and section three examines health literacy's similarities with and differences from related health research disciplines The book sets the practice and research of health literacy on an evidence based thoughtful effective efficient and applied course As Dr Richard Carmona says in his foreword It is enthusiastically recommended for all health and medical practitioners and researchers

Community-Based Health Literacy Interventions National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine, Health and Medicine Division, Board on Population Health and Public Health Practice, Roundtable on Health Literacy, 2018-05-10 In its landmark report Health Literacy: A Prescription to End Confusion the Institute of Medicine noted that there are 90 million adults in the United States with limited health literacy who cannot fully benefit from what the health and health care systems have to offer Since the release of that report health literacy has become a vibrant research field that has developed and disseminated a wide range of tools and practices that have helped organizations ranging in size from large health care systems to individual health care providers and pharmacists to engage in health literate discussions with and provide health literate materials for patients and family members Improving the health literacy of organizations can be an important component of addressing the social determinants of health and achieving the triple aim of improving the patient experience improving the health of populations and reducing the cost of care However the focus on organizations does not address the larger issue of how to improve health literacy across the U S population To get a better understanding of the state of community based health literacy interventions the Roundtable on Health Literacy hosted a workshop on July 19 2017 on community based health literacy interventions It featured examples of community based health literacy programs discussions on how to evaluate such programs and the actions the field can take to embrace this larger view of health literacy This publication summarizes the presentations and discussions from the workshop
