Stone, 2019-06-06 During the early years of the Cold War England and the United States both found themselves reassessing their relationship with their former ally the Soviet Union and the status of their own special relationship was far from certain As Jeffrey P Stone argues maps from British and American news journals from this period became a valuable tool for relating the new realities of the Cold War to millions of readers These maps were vehicles for political ideology revealing both obvious and subtle differences in how each country viewed global geopolitics at the onset of the Cold War Richly illustrated with news maps cartographic advertisements and cartoons from the era this book reveals the idiomatic political cultural and material differences contributing to these divergent cartographic visions of the Cold War world

Maps with the News Mark S. Monmonier, 1999 Data User News, 1984 Data User News United States. Bureau of the Census, 1984 Engineering News, 1906 Maps of the News: Journalism as a Practice of Cartography Mike Gasher, 2021-04-30 This book adopts a unique perspective on journalism by considering it as a practice of cartography Through every aspect of their work journalists describe and define their community and situate that community within the larger world With words images and sounds journalists sketch out the boundaries of community define its values identify key components of its political economic and cultural infrastructure describe its constituents position community with respect to neighbouring communities highlight other constituencies with which this community has important ties and relegate to the margins great portions of the rest of the world These news reports create mental maps for news audiences cartographies of the imagination from whatever news sources they draw upon Because access to the world is highly mediated it is largely through news reporting and commentary that we come to know that world Thus these maps of the news wield considerable symbolic power feeding the social imaginary News media power is two fold First it is the power of selection one of inclusion and exclusion exposure and suppression Second it is the power of categorization entailing classification definition and suppression
