RIDER. HAGGARD, 2019 Marie H. Rider Haggard, 2013-05-09 Although in my old age I Allan Quatermain have taken to writing after a fashion never yet have I set down a single word of the tale of my first love and of the adventures that are grouped around her beautiful and tragic history I suppose this is because it has always seemed to me too holy and far off a matter as holy and far off as is that heaven which holds the splendid spirit of Marie Marais But now in my age that which was far off draws near again and at night in the depths between the stars sometimes I seem to see the opening doors through which I must pass and leaning earthwards across their threshold with outstretched arms and dark and dewy eyes a shadow long forgotten by all save me the shadow of Marie Marais An old man s

dream doubtless no more Still I will try to set down that history which ended in so great a sacrifice and one so worthy of record though I hope that no human eye will read it until I also am forgotten or at any rate have grown dim in the gathering mists of oblivion And I am glad that I have waited to make this attempt for it seems to me that only of late have I come to understand and appreciate at its true value the character of her of whom I tell and the passionate affection which was her bounteous offering to one so utterly unworthy as myself What have I done I wonder that to me should have been decreed the love of two such women as Marie and that of Stella also now long dead to whom alone in the world I told all her tale I remember I feared lest she should take it ill but this was not so Indeed during our brief married days she thought and talked much of Marie and some of her last words to me were that she was going to seek her and that they would wait for me together in the land of love pure and immortal So with Stella s death all that side of life came to an end for me since during the long years which stretch between then and now I have never said another tender word to woman I admit however that once long afterwards a certain little witch of a Zulu did say tender words to me and for an hour or so almost turned my head an art in which she had great skill This I say because I wish to be quite honest although it I mean my head for there was no heart involved in the matter came straight again at once Her name was Mameena and I have set down her remarkable story elsewhere To return As I have already written in another book I passed my youth with my old father a Church of England clergyman in what is now the Cradock district of the Cape Colony
