Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of older adults. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The participants were 60 older adults (mean age = 70.5 years) who were randomly assigned to either a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-impact aerobically and resistance training program or a control group. The results showed that the participants in the training group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and health-related quality of life than the participants in the control group. The findings of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-impact aerobically and resistance training program can improve the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of older adults.
