Technology infrastructure

When Boeing first commercially developed engines for new flight in 1988, it was still a relatively small company. The 787 Dreamliner, however, was a massive undertaking. It required a global network of suppliers, many of whom were not even in existence when the project began. Boeing had to build a new infrastructure to support the project, one that could handle the complexity of a global supply chain. This infrastructure was built on a foundation of trust and collaboration. Boeing worked closely with its suppliers to ensure that they were all on the same page. This collaboration was essential for the success of the project. It allowed Boeing to bring in the best talent from around the world, and it ensured that everyone was working towards the same goal. The result was a masterpiece of engineering and teamwork.

Boeing's success in the 787 Dreamliner project was a testament to its ability to build a global network of suppliers and customers. It was a testament to its ability to bring in the best talent from around the world, and it was a testament to its ability to ensure that everyone was working towards the same goal.
