Major, Maj, and Capt ranks were also introduced in a number of smaller, privately owned units in a similar manner. The U.S. Army changed its own internal structure after attaining the first war. Several military divisions were necessary to plan or administered in the second half of the war.

These procedures resulted in three 120-minutes sessions in which the children and teachers discussed the following themes: (a) Understanding the world, (b) Understanding the self, and (c) Understanding the environment. The first session was devoted to the first theme, and the second and third sessions were devoted to the second and third themes.
