Marilyn Amanda Ngoho Reavey:

Marilyn Amanda Ngoho Reavey, 2015 Literary Nonfiction Poetry Memoir Asian American Studies Winner of the 2017 Association for Asian American Studies Award for Best Book of Creative Writing Poetry Amanda Ngoho Reavey's first book MARILYN began as an exploration through somatic experiments on what it means to stay and became a fragmented map of the immigration system the international adoption process and family How do you articulate disenfranchised grief How does a person who has no origin write herself into existence What happens when all you have left is as Sarita Echavez See says the body to articulate loss Framed by a return trip to the Philippines in 2011 her first time back since leaving Reavey takes the most intense images real imagined dreamed encountered while living in between six different countries and expunges them in attempt to stitch the Asian diasporic body The result is an ancestral line a path back not to the beginning of life nor just before but rather to the primordial To ancestral roots To orality a name Amanda Ngoho Reavey has written a work of loss healing and place What is a page both before and after a radical fire What does it mean to come to language again as to life Reavey answers these questions through her many attempts in this book and beyond it to breathe create survive think and be Bhanu Kapil MARILYN combines lyric essay documentary image and visual poetry to investigate origin identity and transformation The multiple literary forms speak to the work's thematic preoccupations with camouflage and adaptability and shapeshifting all concerns of the diasporic body The author renames herself moving the work beyond literary convention into performative conceptual and shamanistic contexts The name I go by now is Ngoho It is a verb A verb expresses action This is an active work by an active mind Amy Catanzano
