- Reactions at the 1,2-positions of the pyrimidine ring are generally more reactive than those at the 3,4-positions. This is due to the presence of the amino group at the 2-position, which is in conjugation with the ring and thus increases the electron density at the 1-position. The amino group at the 4-position is also in conjugation with the ring, but it is less reactive than the amino group at the 2-position. The amino group at the 6-position is also in conjugation with the ring, but it is less reactive than the amino group at the 2-position.
