HEAT EXCHANGERS

Types of Heat Exchangers

11-1C Heat exchangers are classified according to the flow type: parallel flow, counter flow, crossflow, or shell-and-tube. In parallel flow, both hot and cold fluids enter the heat exchanger at the same end and exit at the other. In counter flow, the hot and cold fluids enter the heat exchanger at opposite ends and flow in opposite directions. In cross flow, the hot and cold fluids flow across each other without mixing.

11-2C In terms of construction type, heat exchangers are classified as compact, shell and tube, and regenerative heat exchangers. Compact heat exchangers are typically designed to obtain large heat transfer surface per unit volume. The major compact, cross-flow compact heat exchangers are designed by automotive, chemical, and other firms. An important characteristic of these compact heat exchangers is that they have large exchangers' surfaces in large vessels for which pressure is small. Although they are protected in design from fluid leakage, compact heat exchangers are not as robust as shell-and-tube heat exchangers. In terms of design, compact heat exchangers are the most flexible design type, while shell-and-tube heat exchangers are the most flexible design type.

11-3C A heat exchanger is classified as being compact if $BSA \geq 700 \text{ m}^2/\text{m}^3$ or $2500 \text{ ft}^2/\text{ft}^3$, where B is the ratio of the heat transfer surface area to the volume, which is called the area density. The area density for double-pipe heat exchangers varies from 10 to 200. The difference of one order of magnitude is a compact heat exchanger.

11-4C In cross-flow heat exchangers, the hot and the cold fluids move in parallel to each other but both enter the heat exchanger at opposite ends and flow in opposite directions. In cross-flow heat exchangers, the two fluids enter the heat exchanger at the same end. This means that the two fluids enter the heat exchanger at the same end and flow in the same direction. In parallel-flow heat exchangers, the hot and cold fluids enter the heat exchanger at the same end and flow in the same direction. In counter-flow heat exchangers, the hot and cold fluids enter the heat exchanger at opposite ends and flow in opposite directions. In cross-flow heat exchangers, the hot and cold fluids enter the heat exchanger at the same end and flow in the same direction.

11-5C In the shell-and-tube exchangers, both the hot and cold fluids are contained in tubes that are placed in a shell. The hot and cold fluids enter the heat exchanger at the same end and flow in opposite directions. In the shell-and-tube exchangers, the hot and cold fluids enter the heat exchanger at the same end and flow in the same direction. In the shell-and-tube exchangers, the hot and cold fluids enter the heat exchanger at the same end and flow in the same direction. In the shell-and-tube exchangers, the hot and cold fluids enter the heat exchanger at the same end and flow in the same direction.

11-6C Using the design procedure for shell-and-tube heat exchangers, engineers can design heat exchangers that are compact, shell-and-tube, or regenerative. The design procedure for compact heat exchangers is different from the design procedure for shell-and-tube heat exchangers.

11-7C Using the design procedure for compact heat exchangers, engineers can design heat exchangers that are compact, shell-and-tube, or regenerative. The design procedure for compact heat exchangers is different from the design procedure for shell-and-tube heat exchangers.
