

The grade inflation

The occurrence of grade inflation is affecting the quality of education throughout the system. A lot of students, at every level of education, are promoted to higher grades even though they are unqualified for that grade. Grade inflation is quite similar to the concept of economic inflation in which price of commodities rise leading to fall in the value of money or real purchasing power. It impacts the standard of education in a similar way. Several studies have been made in this regard to confirm that grade inflation is a reality and it is sad to note that this problem is continuously increasing as compared to the previous years. Studies confirm that by making a comparison of grades being currently obtained by the students with grades obtained by them in the past, educational institutions are deliberately awarding higher grades to some of their students. A partial motive to awarding higher grades is the market factor in which their students become competitive while applying for a job or moving to the next level of education (Bok 211). Students receiving higher grades make it difficult to discern the average student, from the above average student, from the exceptional student.

A general perception that by paying more tuition fees, students should be assigned higher grades is also increasingly developing. This phenomenon is similar to paying higher price for a good or service in order to getting maximum benefits from it. Grade inflation has made a significant impact on those colleges and universities that have set high standards of education (Cohen 401). This shows that students today are less educated than in the past. Furthermore, lower grades are also non-competitive in the marketplace therefore students with higher grades which they do not deserve meet the stringent criteria while those getting real grade are often left behind.

A Comparative Study of Writing Abilities in Two Modes at the Grade 5, 8, and 12 Levels Ian Pringle, Aviva Freedman, Ontario. Ministry of Education, Ontario. Ministry of Colleges and Universities, 1985 The third of three studies involving a comparative analysis of transactional and narrative writing of selected samples of students in two Ontario districts this study addressed questions arising from the earlier studies and examined the writing skills of students in grades 5 8 and 12 Writing samples were examined for conformity to the norms of story structure and argumentation and the subject matter of the transactional writing was analyzed The level of affective development manifested in subsamples of both the stories and the arguments was rated All the papers in the sample were analyzed for syntactic complexity scores and for mechanical and conventional errors Comparisons of the first and second versions of the papers were made to assess skills in revising and editing Findings indicated the need of students to learn how to write an argument and to revise a paper Other implications were 1 that since the level of difficulty of one aspect of a writing task may decrease the lack of control in another teachers must take into account the nature of difficulties in the tasks they set students and make their assessments accordingly 2 that students at all levels should be given occasions to write narratives 3 that the model of persuasive discourse should be countered and 4 that writing strategies recommended by authorities need to be implemented EL
