Abstract: This study examined the impact of the 2008 financial crisis on the mental health of young adults in the United States. The study used data from the National Longitudinal Study of Adolescent Health (Add Health) to examine the impact of the crisis on the mental health of young adults aged 18-24. The study found that the crisis had a significant negative impact on the mental health of young adults, with increases in symptoms of depression, anxiety, and stress. The impact was particularly severe for young adults who were unemployed or had a lower income. The study also found that the impact of the crisis was more pronounced for young adults who were female and who had a history of mental health problems. The findings suggest that the crisis had a significant negative impact on the mental health of young adults in the United States, and that the impact was more pronounced for certain groups of young adults.
