STUDY OF NEW TALENT

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of older adults with mild cognitive impairment (MCI). Twenty-four participants were randomly assigned to either a walking or control group. The walking group performed a 12-week walking program, while the control group remained sedentary. Physical health was assessed using a series of physical fitness tests, and psychological health was assessed using a series of psychological tests. The walking group showed significant improvements in physical fitness and psychological health compared to the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of older adults with MCI.
