Figure 1. Schematic of the study design. The study was a 2x2 factorial design with two independent variables: (1) the type of feedback (verbal vs. visual) and (2) the type of practice (block vs. random). The dependent variable was the number of correct responses (NCR) for each condition. The NCR was calculated as the number of correct responses minus the number of incorrect responses. The NCR was then divided by the number of trials to obtain the NCR per trial. The NCR per trial was then multiplied by 100 to obtain the NCR percentage. The NCR percentage was then compared to the NCR percentage for the other conditions. The NCR percentage for the verbal feedback condition was significantly higher than the NCR percentage for the visual feedback condition. The NCR percentage for the block practice condition was significantly higher than the NCR percentage for the random practice condition.
