Brain Research in Language Zvia Breznitz, 2007-12-22 Brain Research in Language addresses important neurological issues involved in reading The reading process is a highly composite cognitive task which relies on brain systems that were originally devoted to other functions The majority of studies in this area have implemented behavioral methodologies which provide information concerning the entire cognitive sequence at the conclusion of processing only in the reader's output However these measures cannot specify all of the covert component operations that contribute to reading nor can they determine the relative processing times required by the individual stages Furthermore they cannot determine which processes occur serially which occur in parallel and which overlap in time Brandeis Johnson 1995 Recent advancements in the field of neuroscience and cognitive development however have added a new dimension with regard to the research into the universal and domain specific aspects of reading with the advent of innovative neurophysiological measurement techniques The most common are electroencephalography EEG and functional magnetic resonance imaging fMRI These two methods provide researchers with the opportunity to examine in depth the neural correlates of the reading processing with precise temporal and spatial resolutions respectively This book presents data obtained from various studies employing behavioral electrophysiological and imaging methodologies in different languages focusing on the regular reading process and the dyslexic population Educators and researchers within neuroscience literacy and special education will benefit from Brain Research in Language
