Abstract gpr125 encodes a member of the class III G-protein-coupled receptor (GPCR) family. Gpr125 is expressed in a wide range of tissues, including the brain, where it is highly enriched in the hippocampus. In this study, we have characterized the expression and function of Gpr125 in the hippocampus. We found that Gpr125 is expressed in a cell-type-specific manner, with the highest levels of expression in the granule cells of the dentate gyrus. We also found that Gpr125 is involved in the regulation of the expression of other genes in the hippocampus, including CaMKII α and CREB. These results suggest that Gpr125 may play a role in the regulation of gene expression in the hippocampus, and that it may be involved in the regulation of the expression of other genes in the hippocampus.

Abstract A population of 1000 individuals was sampled from a large, randomly mating population of Arabidopsis thaliana in the Netherlands. The population was divided into 100 groups of 10 individuals each. The groups were then subjected to a series of 10 generations of selection, with the goal of maximizing the frequency of a specific allele. The results showed that the frequency of the allele increased over time, and that the rate of increase was higher in groups with higher initial frequencies of the allele. This suggests that the rate of evolution is dependent on the initial frequency of the allele, and that the rate of evolution is higher in populations with higher initial frequencies of the allele.
