Let's Have a Word . . . or Two!

The English language contains many thousands of words. However, just memorizing the dictionary won't make you a good communicator. Words must be used in the right way for them to mean something. What is the "right way" to use English words? They should be put together in sentences, groups of words arranged to express complete thoughts.

Play the Part: Parts of Speech

Just as actors in a drama play different characters, words in sentences have particular roles to play. These roles are determined by what part of speech a word is.

The eight parts of speech are:
Nouns	Adverbs
Pronouns	Conjunctions
Verbs	Prepositions
Interjections	Adjectives

Nouns: Stars of the Show

Nouns get the leading role in a sentence. Nouns are people, places, or things.

Common nouns name general items: school, laptop, cat, dog, girl. The common nouns can also be anything else: television, or ideas like freedom.

Proper nouns name a particular person, place, or thing: Abraham, Thanksgiving, China, Tokyo, Anna, Fred.

Hint: Always capitalize proper nouns.

• Thanksgiving is a special time for turkey and other delicious food.

Hint: Let them be verbs, too, but it's not the apples, bananas, and pears that are really fun.

Interjections: Seed in the Soil

Interjections are words that express a sudden feeling or emotion. They are often used to express surprise, joy, or pain.

Personal

Interjections that refer to the speaker or the person being spoken to.

Example: I am so excited to see you! Oh, that's right, you're here!

Exclamatory

Interjections that express a strong feeling or emotion, often used to draw attention to something.

Descriptive

Interjections that describe a person, place, or thing.
