Describing the Hand of God Robert Brennan, 2016-04-28 The question of divine agency in the world remains one important unresolved underlying obstacle in the dialogue between theology and science Modern notions of divine agency are shown to have developed out of the interaction of three factors in early modernity Two are well known late medieval perfect being theology and the early modern application of the notion of the two books of God's revelation to the understanding of the natural order It is argued the third is the early modern appropriation of the Augustinian doctrine of inspiration This assumes the soul's existence and a particular description of divine agency in humans which became more generally applied to divine agency in nature Whereas Newton explicitly draws the parallel between divine agency in humans and that in nature Darwin rejects its supposed perfection and Huxley raises serious questions regarding the traditional understanding of the soul This book offers an alternative incarnational description of divine agency freeing consideration of divine agency from being dependent on resolving the complex issues of perfect being theology and the existence of the soul In conversation with Barth's pneumatology this proposal is shown to remain theologically coherent and plausible while resolving or avoiding a range of known difficulties in the science theology dialogue

A Radical Philosophy of Saint Paul Stanislas Breton, 2011 Stanislas Breton's A Radical Philosophy of Saint Paul which focuses on the political implications of the apostle's writings was an instrumental text in Continental philosophy's contemporary turn to religion Reading Paul's work against modern thought and history Breton helped launch a reassessment of Marxism introduce secular interpretations of biblical and theological traditions develop radical negativity as a critical category and rework modern political ideas through a theoretical lens Newly translated and critically situated this edition takes a fresh approach to Breton's classic work reacquainting readers with the remarkable ways in which an ancient apostle can reset our understanding of the political Breton begins with Paul's biography and the texts of his conversion which challenge common conceptions of identity He broaches the question of allegory and divine predestination introduces the idea of subjectivity as an effect of power and confronts Paul's critique of Law which leads to an exploration of the logics and limits of agency and power Breton develops these and other insights in relation to Paul's subversive reflections on the crucified messiah which challenge meaning and reason and upend our current world order Neither a coherent theologian nor a stable humanist Breton's Paul becomes a fascinating figure of excess and madness experiencing a kind of being that transcends philosophy secularity and religion
