Essay Questions

Question 1: What is the main point of Rorty's argument in "Solidarity, Sentiment, and the Limits of the Self"? How does he support this claim?

Rorty argues that the main point of his argument is that the self is not a fixed entity, but rather a collection of social and cultural practices. He supports this claim by arguing that the self is always in the process of being constructed and reconstructed by the social and cultural practices in which it is embedded.
