It is an irony that these other young people in "The Golden Age" are the only ones who do not receive the same intense interest and respect as the narrator is. The narrator's feelings of being the "golden child" are also a warning, for as good as he is, he is still young and naive. In the 1950s, young children, at least in the United States, were not expected to become "legitimate" physicians. They are children, in other words, and children are not to be taken too seriously. "The Golden Age" is thus a warning to the young, but it is also a warning to the older, for the narrator's feelings of being the "golden child" are also a warning.

It's not possible to make anyone responsible for someone's death. It's wrong to say that anyone should be held responsible. The 9/11 attacks were the result of a complex set of circumstances, including the actions of the hijackers, the failure of the FAA to detect the planes, the failure of the ATIS to provide accurate information, and the failure of the FAA to provide accurate information. It's not possible to make anyone responsible for someone's death.
