Ross Holland, Jr., 1995-07-19 Lighthouses are increasingly endangered by modernization and abandonment Simple steel skeletons are replacing the picturesque conical towers squat screw piles and Cape Cod styles so much a part of America s maritime history This traveler s guide to more than 300 of the nation s most significant lighthouses and lightships includes an introductory look at the evolution of lighthouse technology and how these obsolete but beloved structures can be rescued Bodie Island Coast Guard Station, Historic Structure Report, 2005 (Classic Reprint) Joseph K. Oppermann, 2017-10-27 Excerpt from Bodie Island Coast Guard Station Historic Structure Report 2005 Travel by sea along the Eastern seaboard of the United States can be especially troublesome but no section more so than the Outer Banks off North Carolina The strong currents that allow ships to travel quickly also bring them close to shore Shifting sands and notoriously rapid changes in weather have wrecked many a ship thus earning the early moniker the graveyard of the Atlantic Further north the conditions are not quite so severe but can be treacherous nonetheless Near the major ports of Boston New York and Philadelphia private groups formed as early as the 1780s to provide assistance to seafarers in danger There were many public outcries for a nationally coordinated rescue effort until in 1848 a New Jersey representative secured from Congress a allocation for a variety of assistance As a result eight stations were constructed there under the supervision of the United States Treasury Department the federal government had officially become involved Additional allocations followed rapidly expanding the financial assistance to include states along the lower Atlantic shore as well as the Gulf Soon the life saving Service within the Department of Treasury developed a prototype station design In addition to keeper's and crew's quarters a self-contained boat room for a lifeboat was a standard feature. Improvements were incorporated as new station types evolved, adding an open observation deck to monitor the coastline, then replacing it with an enclosed tower in a later type. During the early years, there was a variety of ancillary structures about the site, including privies, water tanks, and kitchen buildings. In North Carolina, the first stations built were the 1874 Type Seven of these compact two-story Carpenter Gothic style buildings, which were stretched out along the coast. Then, in 1878-79, eleven of the 1876 Type stations were added as infill between the earlier stations, establishing a pattern of five to seven miles between stations. One of the 1876 Type stations is the Bodie Island Life Saving Station, then known as Tommy's Hummock Station. It was replaced by the much larger, more modern Chatham Type station, built a short distance away, in 1925. The new station, the last design type developed by the life-saving Service, featured such amenities as indoor plumbing, a self-contained kitchen, and electric lighting. The United States Coast Guard, having absorbed the life-saving Service in 1915, was the administering federal agency. Cape Lookout National Seashore Coast Guard Station Boat House National Park Service, 2013-06-14. The Life Saving Station played a major role in the history of Cape Lookout, and the boat houses were crucial to the station's operation.
