Industry As A Customer Of The Federal Laboratories:

Industry As a Customer of the Federal Laboratories Council on Competitiveness, 1992-09      Industry as a Customer of the Federal Laboratories Council on competitiveness washington dc, 1992 In many ways the Federal laboratories are a microcosm of the broader competitiveness challenges facing the United States Set up at different times to accomplish different missions they are geared more to the Cold War era that is behind us than to the era of intense international economic competition in which we now find ourselves Like many of the policies and institutions that were developed during the post war period much of the work at the labs needs to be refocused to address contemporary problems Refocusing the activities of the Federal labs however entails risk as well as opportunity Risk in that they constitute a major national resource which could be squandered if we fail to manage the transition appropriately Opportunity in that they represent important capabilities which can be harnessed to strengthen U S industry s technological performance It is essential that U S policymakers the business community and the labs themselves approach this transition with a strategy and realistic expectations instead of just letting it happen There is no doubt that the United States should make every effort to enhance laboratory industry cooperation in the years ahead The national investment that we have made in these facilities is simply too great to ignore But we must not let the need to refocus the labs cloud our view of the contribution that they can realistically make to U S industrial performance Many business executives doubt that U S industry will derive significant new technological benefits from the Federal labs and caution against holding up technology transfer from the labs to industry as the answer to our competitiveness problems To do so would not only be unrealistic but also could ultimately create deep cynicism about the prospects for technology transfer      New Directions for the DOE Multiprogram Laboratories--implications for the Federal Laboratory System United States. Congress. House. Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, 1993      Improving Technology Transfer Programs at Department of Energy Laboratories United States. Congress. House. Committee on Small Business. Subcommittee on Regulation, Business Opportunities, and Energy, 1993      An Analysis of NASA Technology Transfer Lance B. Bush, 1996      Limited by Design Michael Crow, Barry Bozeman, 1998-09-25 Limited by Design is the first comprehensive study of the varying roles played by the more than 16 000 research and development laboratories in the U S national innovation system Michael Crow and Barry Bozeman offer policy makers and scientists a blueprint for making more informed decisions about how to best utilize and develop the capabilities of these facilities Some labs such as Bell Labs Westinghouse and Eastman Kodak have been global players since the turn of the century Others such as Los Alamos National Laboratory have been mainstays of the military energy industrial complex since they evolved in the 1940s These and other institutions have come to serve as the infrastructure upon which a range of industries have relied and have had a tremendous impact on U S social and economic history Michael Crow and Barry Bozeman illustrate the histories missions structure and behavior of individual laboratories and explore the policy contexts in which they are embedded In studying this large and varied collection of labs Crow Bozeman and their colleagues develop a new framework for understanding the structure and behavior of laboratories that also provides a basis for rationalizing federal science and technology policy to create more effective laboratories The book draws upon interviews and surveys collected from thousands of scientists administrators and policy makers and features boxed lab windows throughout that provide detailed information on the variety of laboratories active in the U S national innovation system Limited by Design addresses a range of questions in order to enable policy makers university administrators and scientists to plan effectively for the future of research and development
