

A class in understanding water becomes a part of their boating life. Instead, they learned their skill from the sea's school of experience and the proficiency developed over long years of meeting every conceivable kind of situation.

So, in studying the principles of inboard boat handling, it's helpful to keep in mind that your goal is not so much to being able to answer the questions as it is to understand an inboard and how it responds to your guidance.

We feel that it is all-important and that is the reason the Century Boat Company has printed this up-to-date booklet. We want to answer your questions about an inboard—all of which follow in a general and methodical way.

RULES OF THE ROAD

Before getting too deep into the inboard story, we wish to inform our readers that the U.S. Coast Guard is an ever-present help to the boating public. Its boating regulations prescribe minimum standards of safety and you should equip your Century so that it will comply with these regulations.

We suggest that you obtain a copy of the Coast Guard publication "Recreational Boating Guide" (CG-940), which can be obtained from the Supermarine of Documents, U.S. Command Training Office, Washington, D.C. 20390.

In addition, boats like automobiles, are subject to traffic laws, and like cars, boating traffic laws may differ according to locality.

There are four sets of Coast Guard enforced marine traffic laws known as the "Rules of the Road". They are (1) Great Lakes, (2) Western Rivers, (3) Inland, (4) International. Pamphlets have been prepared by the Coast Guard concerning each area and are available from the local Coast Guard unit or U.S. Coast Guard Headquarters, 1000 N. Street N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

WHAT IS AN INBOARD?

A boat is considered an inboard when the motor and reverse gear are all inside the hull, and the enough forward so that a long propeller shaft (17½-17) can extend aft from the motor through the hull to drive a propeller and surface under the aft end of the boat's keel.

The boat is steered by means of a rudder and the only mechanical part in the stuffing box — and that requires a minimum of maintenance.

An inboard engine is substantially easier to maintain than other marine power units, has a larger cooling capacity and designed to carry a heavy load at top speeds.

HOW DOES AN INBOARD-DRIVER FROM AN V IN?

The inboard differs from an V in that the complete engine and reverse gear are within the hull proper — and that the center of balance is farther ahead than the V in installation.

There are fewer parts to an inboard (approximately 100 less than an V in), it has no transom plate,
