Government ISA Review

UNIT 1 - Purpose of Government and Economic Systems

Types of Governments

In a totalitarian government, there is rule by one person who holds all the power in government. In a monarchy, there is rule by one person who holds all the power in government. The right to rule is passed down from one family member to another.

In an oligarchy, there is rule by a small group of people (usually well educated and well connected), a single political party or military group. In a presidential democracy, the executive and legislative branches are separate; power is separated to prevent one branch from becoming too powerful. In a parliamentary democracy, the people elect the legislature (Parliament) which chooses the Prime Minister from the majority party.

Characteristics of Governments

In a democratic government, the government is limited in its power by the consent of the governed. Liberties and rights are guaranteed by a written constitution. Decisions are made by all the people voting by secret ballot. Power is exercised by elected officials who are chosen by the people. Government and people are under the same rule of law.

In an authoritarian government, government is not limited. People have little or no rights. Elections do not offer a choice. Voting is not secret. Power is located in the hands of an individual or small group. The government does not follow the laws. Threats and force are used to keep the peace.

Purposes of Government

There are four purposes of government. One is maintaining social order and includes actions by the government to keep people safe. Examples include making laws, providing courts and paying police as well as safety codes for amusement rides and regulating industries. Another purpose is providing national security when the government protects our country from attacks from other countries. The government employs the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, Marines and Air Force to do this. Providing public services is also a purpose of government where the government provides people with things to help them live their lives. Examples include schools, roads, sewer systems, trash pick up and road construction to name a few. The final purpose of government is making economic decisions where the government wants to make sure that people can take care of their basic needs of food, clothing and shelter. Minimum wage laws are set and the country also gets involved in trade treaties.

Systems of Government

An important question about government is: What should be the relationship between the national government and local governments? A nation of any size may be divided into many regions that are known by different names: provinces, states, territories, counties, districts, townships, and municipalities. Should each local unit have the power to make its own laws? Or should the laws making power belong only to the national government?

There are three possible answers to this question:
