1763-1764 The Expulsion of the Acadians

During the Seven Years' War, the British feared that the French would revolt against them. The British wanted the French Acadians to pledge allegiance to the British king who was a Protestant.

The French Acadians were not willing to do this as they did not want to go against their Catholic faith. The British government viewed them as a potential threat. For this reason, about 12,000 French Acadians were expelled from the country.

The Acadians were dispersed to various locations, including the Thirteen Colonies (now the United States), England, and France. Some Acadians ended up in Louisiana, where their descendants became known as Cajuns. The Cajuns maintained their distinct cultural heritage, including their French language and traditions.
