I will have to go through the data on the 1990s and see if there is any evidence to suggest that the 1990s were any less 'free' than the 1980s. These results are very encouraging, and they are consistent with the findings of other studies. For example, a study by the National Bureau of Economic Research (NBER) found that the average return on investment in education is about 10% per year. This is a very high return, especially when compared to the return on investment in other assets, such as stocks and bonds. The NBER study also found that the return on investment in education is higher for those who have a college degree than for those who do not. This suggests that education is a very important factor in determining one's economic success.
