Jumping Magic Little Elena Eusse:

Jumping, the Magic Little Dog Luz Elena Eusse Lopez, 2015-12-03 Ignacio felt bored in that large room. It was nine in the morning on that Monday and he had nothing to do. His life had not been making any sense. He had a lot of money and so he did not need to work. True friends were nowhere to be found. He knew very well that those bohemians were loyal to his fortune, not to him. His one and only true companion was Jumping, his Schnauzer, gray color dog, beautiful, small and mischievous. That day as Ignacio was walking around the avenue The Beach, he saw the small stray dog stop in front of him. The little animal was looking at him so tenderly, having perhaps recognized that rare thing in Ignacio, that of being so carefree. Not knowing why, Ignacio took the dog in his arms and took him to his house, giving him shelter and food. Surely the dog was well kept because he was beautiful. The white teeth reflected his age. Three or four months. Ignacio did not find a suitable name for his pet. Always called him Come here, boy, and the little dog would run towards him. He jumped on two paws when he wanted to achieve something. Then the young man would say jump, jump, jumping the puppy, jumping. And thus the small Schnauzer, the protected of the millionaire, began to be called Jumping. Sometimes Ignacio danced in his room with the music of a waltz and Jumping imitated him. He was wonderstruck by the talent of the small dog. As he had nothing better to do, he bought a book to train him and started devoting all his time to this work. Jumping and his owner were sleeping together. This Monday, as always, Ignacio woke up at nine in the morning. The dog moved his legs lazily, snuggling in bed, as if telling Ignacio that he was still drowsy. Both sank in to the bed again and kept sleeping until twelve. Mary, his housekeeper, never came to the room before eleven. She would carry a delicious orange juice or ice cream to soothe the discomfort caused by a night of liquor with the buddies, who were as unsettled as Ignacio. Ignacio was fond of adventures, but he was lazy; he did not know what to do with his life. All nights, he invited his comrades and played cards while they drank large quantities of whisky. The bohemians were drunk to the three or four in the morning, at which time Jumping and Ignacio would go to sleep. The group of friends was formed by Luis Munoz, painter; Jorge Suarez, musician; Miguel Acevedo, poet; and Mario Ospina, writer, and all of them had the same attitude to life as Ignacio. Life had no meaning for any of them. They remained lazy and idle; consequently, they made no progress in life. One night, mind dulled by the liquor, his comrades talked to him about the reality and sadness of the life of poverty and humility. He never had any need to work, and that's why he was so insensitive to the pain of others. They, on the other hand, had a great heart and were inspired by the misery for their paintings, poems, and writings. They said to the young man of twenty-five years that he would not be able to live, not even for a single day, in a poor neighborhood in the city. Ignacio, totally drunk as he was, responded to his friends: Let us do something better. I bet that I can live for two years in the most absolute misery. If I break my word, I will give all my money to charitable institutions or to you. If I win, you will work for me without remuneration for a year. They drafted a letter and each one of them put his signature on it. Mario, considered as the most serious of them, kept the writing with him. That Monday when Ignacio awoke, he remembered vaguely what had happened Knowing that he had given his word he decided to get up and begin to fulfill that stupid bet made in a moment of insanity Live in misery What horror Ignacio thought But he had to fulfill his promise because otherwise he had to spend the rest of his life in absolute poverty
