Definition of management accounting

- Management accounting is defined as 'the processes and techniques that focus on the effective and efficient use of organisational resources to support managers in their tasks of enhancing both customer value and shareholder value'
- Effectiveness means achieving the objectives successfully and efficiency means achieving the objectives with the least consumption of resources
- A management accounting system is an information system that produces the information required by managers to create value and manage resources. Management accounting information can be provided on a regular basis on the request of management.

Difference between Management and financial accounting:

	Management accounting	Financial accounting
Users of information	Internal: management	External: users and company management
Nature of information	- Financial and non-financial - Drawn from multiple sources: production, operations, customer and market data - Past and future oriented - Timely - Subjective - Relevant	- Financial data drawn from accounting system - Past oriented - Reliable - Verifiable - Highly aggregated
Regulation	No accounting standards or rules	Prepared according to accounting standards
Source of data	Both financial and non-financial data is drawn from many sources - the core accounting system, production system and market, customer and economic data from external sources	Financial data is almost exclusively drawn from the organisation's core transaction-based accounting system

Role and functions of management accounting

- Managers are involved in 3 primary activities:
 - o Planning: involves developing both short-term (operational) and long-term (strategic) objectives and goals of an organisation and identifying the resources needed to achieve them. Operational planning involves the development of short-term objectives and goals, usually achievable within one year, for example planning the raw materials and production needs for producing a product for the next annual period. A short-term operational plan is called a budget.
