

What is Linguistic Evidence?

A text with some value in legal proceedings comes in many different forms to police officers, detectives, private investigators, security specialists, intelligence analysts, attorneys, and private individuals. Some civil disputes are obviously associated with certain types of linguistic evidence, such as trademarks, service marks, and patent applications. In certain criminal scenarios, some forms of linguistic evidence are likewise obvious: a bank robbery note, a threat letter, a suicide note, a ransom note.

SOMETIMES THE LINGUISTIC EVIDENCE IN A CASE IS OBVIOUS, SOMETIMES INVESTIGATORS MUST SEARCH FOR IT

It is clear, from these kinds of documents, that linguistic evidence can play a crucial role in investigating a crime, and the crime with which such a document is associated is also obvious, (although sometimes this kind of document is a red herring to cover up a different kind of crime). For instance, in actual cases, a suicide note has been written to disturb or cover up a murder; a threat letter has been sent in order to mislead investigators away from conspirators. Whether in civil or criminal scenarios, the words themselves are critical pieces of evidence in proving some aspect of the crime or civil trespass.

Other kinds of linguistic evidence are not so well-known, and the crimes or civil actions to which they attach are likewise not so obvious. Blog posts, dating website profiles, handwritten codicils and wills, business emails and memoranda, personal emails within a family or corporation, graffiti sprayed on a shop's wall — these kinds of linguistic evidence can occur in many different crimes or civil and security investigations.

FUNDAMENTAL QUESTIONS ASKED ABOUT LANGUAGE-BASED EVIDENCE

At ILE our research agenda is set for the “four corners of forensic linguistics,” (Chaski 2013), to reflect the fundamental questions we have been repeatedly asked about documents relevant to a case. Often the crucial investigative issues are:

1. Author/Speaker Identification: Who authored this document? Who spoke this voicemail message?

Intersections of language rights and social justice in the Caribbean context Clive Forrester, 2023-12-10 This volume brings together the work of six authors who explore various dimensions of language rights and how they intersect with social justice in the Caribbean context Language rights advocacy has been an ongoing issue in Caribbean linguistics since at least the 1970s when the Society for Caribbean Linguistics was established and linguists started to turn their attention to the marginalised status of Creole languages in the region This continued into the 1990s when dismal scores in secondary school English resulted in governments singling out Creole languages as the culprit and linguists had to get involved in shaping language policy for territories across the region By 2011 the role of linguists was cemented in the language rights debate with the creation of the Charter on Language Rights in the Creole speaking Caribbean Using examples from Jamaica and St Lucia the current study examines the challenges that still persist ten years after the Charter specifically in the areas of language advocacy linguistic discrimination and communicative hurdles in the courtroom

Partitioned Representations J. Dinsmore, 2013-03-07 Cognitive science is a field that began with the realization that researchers in varied disciplines psychology artificial intelligence linguistics philosophy formal semantics neuroscience and others had taken on a common set of problems in representation and meaning in reasoning and language Nevertheless cognitive science as a whole enjoys no common methodology or theoretical framework and is in danger of becoming even more fragmented with time There are two reasons for this First cognitive science is built on existing methodologies that have different historical origins As a result the psychologist's truth is different from the linguist's truth The artificial intelligence researcher's truth is different from the philosopher's truth The neuroscientist's truth is different from the formal semanticist's truth All too often there is little or no recognition of the relevance of work in other disciplines to one's own concerns Second cognitive scientists tend to develop theories around isolated problems For instance there are theories about how humans categorize concepts about how humans analyze linguistic expressions syntactically about how the English tense system works semantically about how humans reason about space or reason about time about how goal directed problem solving occurs about how the brain computes and so on
