

The Madeline Hunter Model of Mastery Learning

Dr. Madeline Hunter's research showed effective teachers have a methodology when planning and presenting a lesson. Hunter found that no matter what the teacher's style, grade level, subject matter, or economic background of the students a properly taught lesson contained eight elements that enhanced and maximized learning. She labeled eight elements and began two decades of teacher training. The elements referred to as Lesson Design, Target Teaching, or Critical Teaching, have stood the test of time – still used today in many teacher colleges and as reference for judging teacher effectiveness in many school districts.

Within each element of Lesson Design, there are many sub-skills, methods, and techniques – each demanding training, practice, and review in order to attain mastery of the Hunter model. Simply knowing about or reading about Lesson Design will not produce flawless performance, but will form a basis for decision making.

Basic Hunter Vocabulary

(Each term has been defined using two related statements)

1. Anticipatory Set

The teacher focuses the students' thoughts on to what will be learned (Tie in yesterday's lesson with today's lesson. Get them interested.)

Anticipatory set is defined as a short activity or prompt that focuses the students' attention before the actual lesson begins. Uses when students enter the room or in a transition, anticipatory set might be a hand-out given to students at the door, review questions written on the board, two short problems presented on a transparency on the overhead, an agenda for the lesson written on the chalkboard, etc

2. Objective and Purpose

Students learn more effectively when they know what they are supposed to be learning and why. Teachers also teach more effectively when they have the same information. (Tell what/how/why/the students are going to learn.)
