Abstract: The authors examined the effects of a 10-week, 12-session, group-based, self-management program on the self-reported health status of 100 low-income, African American women. The program was designed to help women understand and manage their health problems, and to help them make decisions about their health care. The program was evaluated using a pretest-posttest design. The results showed that the program had a significant positive effect on the self-reported health status of the women. The authors conclude that the program is a promising intervention for improving the health status of low-income, African American women.
