The Fact Checker Austin Kelley, 2025-04-15

Mirthful laugh out loud funny and surprisingly philosophical The Fact Checker is a brilliant debut novel featuring a missing woman who might be perfectly fine and a single minded investigator yearning for meaning morality and accuracy in an increasingly post truth world It's just a puff piece about a farmer's market I said to myself It's not going to kill anyone It started out like any other morning for the Fact Checker The piece Mandeville Green didn't raise any red flags There were more pressing stories that week it being 2004 New York City and all Mandeville Green was a light breezy look at a local farm called New Egypt whose Ramapo tomatoes were quickly becoming the summer's hottest produce At first glance the story seemed straightforward but one line made the Fact Checker pause a stray quote from a New Egypt volunteer named Sylvia making a cryptic reference to nefarious business at the farmer's market People sell everything here she's alleged to have said It ain't all green When Sylvia abruptly disappears the morning after an unexpectedly long night with the Fact Checker he becomes obsessed with finding her Did Sylvia discover something unsavory about New Egypt or its messianic owner Is it possible she had some reason to fear for her safety Or was it simply something the Fact Checker said Striking the perfect balance of humor wonder sadness and poignancy Austin Kelley's debut novel takes readers on a quixotic quest from one hidden corner of New York City to another from an underground supper club in the Financial District to an abandoned boat turned anarchist community space on the Gowanus Canal As the story develops the Fact Checker begins to question his perception of what's real and what's not Facts can be deceiving after all and if you aren't careful you might miss the truth right in front of your eyes
