U.S. Army deploys application security regimen for munitions system

Industry

Public sector

Objective

Identify and eliminate vulnerabilities in the munitions management software application in order to ensure training superiority and achieve readiness objectives.

Approach

Use HP Fortify software to help prevent attacks to the TAMIS system by accurately measuring the security risk level and fixing application vulnerabilities.

IT matters

- Identified the TAMIS application's risk profile
- Reduced risk for the TAMIS project, within its funding and resource level

Business matters

- Effected a cultural shift in the TAMIS development process
- Established a development lifecycle approach to software security
- Enhanced the U.S. Army's security posture with a higher level of confidence

“HP Fortify offered a comprehensive application security approach that included detection and protection capabilities in a single package. In addition to HP Fortify SCA, we realized the power of dynamic analysis for an application that is up and running, which TAMIS clearly is.”

— Bob Torche, TAMIS Project Manager, U.S. Army

TAMIS is the web-enabled application used by the U.S. Army to manage munitions for wartime, training, and testing operations across the U.S. Armed Forces. Previously, the DoD's approach to IT security had been network-centric, with little attention given to vulnerabilities in its software applications. But, as part of an overarching “Net-Centric Data Strategy,” the Army selected HP Fortify as its application security solution provider in order to ensure training superiority and achieve readiness objectives.
