

Lean Philosophies

There is a lot of shared knowledge for the leaner eye!

Just-in-Time (JIT) is a technique developed by the Japanese during the 1950s and 1960s. It is a system of managing the flow of materials and information. The principle is to have materials and components arrive at the production line just in time for use. This prevents over-inventory, holding costs for and up a more efficient, flexible manufacturing system. JIT is designed to reduce the cycle time of production to less than 24 hours. Today JIT is the most important Lean tool used around the world.

Total Productive Maintenance (TPM) is a maintenance program for organizations with production equipment and personnel. The major goals are to keep equipment and facilities continuously in operation as long as possible, raise production, and offset the effects of machinery and equipment breakdown. TPM should not be used as a "quick fix," since the average equipment for full implementation and integration will require years. The major reasons for long failure in an organization are from a lack of time, resources, and knowledge for implementation.

5S is an approach for organizing the workplace to improve performance that stems from 5 Japanese words: Seiri, Seiton, Seisaku, Seiketsu, and Shikaku (translated as Sort, Set in Order, Shine, Standardize, and Sustain). 5S utilizes visual controls to remove unnecessary materials and equipment, adjust work areas to be used to eliminate searching and moving, standardized the setting and organization of things, and maintain the things through constant thorough maintenance and adherence to the 5S. This process is safe, clean, organized, and high performing work environment.

Sort, Set in Order, Shine, Standardize, and Sustain (5S) are the five steps of the 5S process. These steps are in order steps within any organization which will be better than the majority of most of them. These original 5S steps were described by Taiichi Ohno, and have since been added to to be Lean means into industries that deal with more than just physical production.

A Value Stream Map is a high-level, visual representation of all the processes steps from value added and non-value added that are required to manufacture a customer required value-added product or service. VSM shows the customer, production, information, and product flow, as well as any major barriers to flow. By using VSM to document current and future state conditions, the identification and removal of non-value adding activities can take place.

A New Way of Thinking: Where do I start?

One of the first steps in the Lean process is to identify the value stream. This is the process of identifying the flow of materials and information from the customer to the supplier. The value stream is the sequence of steps that are required to create a product or service. The value stream is the sequence of steps that are required to create a product or service.

It is important to understand that the value stream is not just a physical flow of materials and information. It is a flow of value. Value is the difference between the cost of the product or service and the cost of the materials and information used to create it. The value stream is the sequence of steps that are required to create a product or service. The value stream is the sequence of steps that are required to create a product or service.

Lean Definition

Lean is the philosophy of continuous improvement based upon defining value from the customer's perspective, mapping value streams, creating flow, and production, and the pursuit of perfection. This amounts to requiring less materials, floor space, time, capital investment, and effort in all aspects of a business.

More in short, there are many tools beyond what is covered here, so this guide is meant to be a gentle introduction into the world of efficiency.

Benefits of Lean Implementation

Lean is more than saving costs and resources. It is an attitude toward perfection in the workplace. Here is a list of some benefits associated with Lean:

- | | | |
|---------------------|----------------------|---------------------|
| Flow Improvement | Reduced Setup Times | Shorter Cycle Times |
| Less Inventory | Lesser Inventory | Expanded Workload |
| Productivity Gains | Consistent Reduction | Job Satisfaction |
| Quality Improvement | Costs Reduced | Waste Elimination |

Waste Classification

Muda (Waste), Mura (Unevenness), and Muri (Overload) are Japanese terms that are used for waste classification. Muda is known today as the 7 wastes has expanded upon these foundations of waste classification.

- | | | |
|------------|----------------|----------------|
| Defects | Station | Overproduction |
| Inventory | Transportation | |
| Processing | Making | |

Toyota Production System

Shigeo Shigeo and Taiichi Ohno, the brains behind the Toyota Production System, emphasized TPS with these two "pillars":

Automation, also known as "Jidoka"

This feature of machine design refers to the "human touch" of automation, specifically when a Production Line stops after a defect or anomaly occurs in order to prevent defective parts from being made.

Just in Time, also known as "JIT"

Based on the philosophy that keeping inventory is adding waste, Just in Time focuses on keeping a 0.1 flow. It is also called to eliminate anything that would disrupt this flow.

Continuous Improvement

Continuously measure performance

- Create flow, stability, and flexibility in the system often with "Future State"
- Standardize best practices, use that information to set goals for Future State

QUALITY
COST

Value is important to the customer and the manufacturer. The customer sees value in the product that is purchased, but the manufacturer sees value in the process that used to create the same product.
