

How to write Grant Proposal

Proposal Preparation

Before you begin to write your proposal, there are several steps you should take to prepare. Although the temptation is strong to immediately begin writing, your proposal will be much more effective if you do some “homework” first.

List Goals and Objectives of the Program

Begin by determining the priority areas of the funding agency. Carefully examine the call for proposals, because the goals and objectives of the specific grant are often explicitly listed there. Also, pay attention to what the granting agency is doing and what they are saying publicly. Take a look at recent press releases from the funding agency. Review recent speeches or public presentations given by leaders from that agency. You will gain important insight about their priorities.

Of course you don't have to follow through on every one of the above suggestions, but gathering background information from different sources is a useful way to identify the goals of the program. When you have a clear sense of what the agency values, you can adapt your proposal accordingly. We have provided a worksheet to help you capture the agency's goals and objectives, and determine how your proposal fits them (Agency's Goals worksheet, p. 7).

List Proposal Evaluation Criteria

Most grants have specific criteria that the reviewers use for evaluating all of the proposals. These criteria are often explicitly stated in the call for proposals. Reviewers are instructed to evaluate all of the proposals accordingly. In some instances, the number of points that the reviewers could potentially assign to each criterion is also listed. Make sure that your proposal matches the criteria set out by the funding agency.

As you are preparing your proposal, pay careful attention to these criteria. Put yourself in the position of a reviewer, and evaluate how well you would rate your proposal according to each criterion. We have provided a worksheet for you to list the evaluation criteria and rate your own proposal based on them (Evaluation Criteria worksheet, p. 8).

Seek Clarification

When you first read the call for proposals, you may have the feeling that it is filled with jargon, and, if so, you are not alone. Grant programs often have a set of definitions and language that are unique to that program. To assist you, there is usually a list of definitions somewhere in the call for proposals. After reviewing the list of terms, you may have
