

ELEMENTS OF A GRID

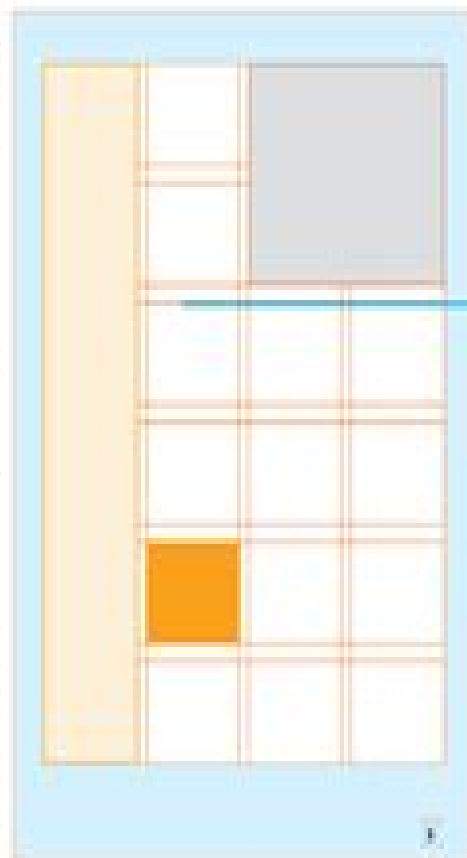

1. Know the Components

The main components of a grid are margins, columns, columns, lines, space, and margins. Starting a new project, you'll first design with your content, then set up your margins and columns. You'll start to make adjustments, and start MARGINS are vertical columns that hold text or images. The width and number of columns on a page or screen can vary depending on the content.

MODULAR are individual blocks, typically, repeated ones, providing a repeating, uniform grid. Consistent modular can create columns and rows of varying sizes.

MARGINS are smaller areas. They represent the amount of space between the main text, including padding and the page content. Margins can also house secondary information, such as notes and captions.

SPACING, GUTTER are groups of columns or rows that can have specific space for type, images, or other information.

FEELINES are elements that break space into horizontal bands for visual flow. Feelines are a method for using space and elements to guide a reader across a page.

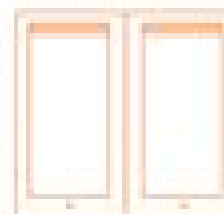

MARGINS are a small rectangle, a document, including elements that appear in the same location, margins include page numbers, running heads and foot, chapter and sections, and lists.
