Meeting, 1920 Rehabilitation Record, Learning Robots Andreas Birk, John Demiris, 2003-06-26 Robot learning is a broad and interdisciplinary area This holds with regard to the basic interests and the scientific background of the researchers involved as well as with regard to the techniques and approaches used The interests that motivate the researchers in this field range from fundamental research issues such as how to constructively understand intelligence to purely application oriented work such as the exploitation of learning techniques for industrial robotics Given this broad scope of interests it is not surprising that although AI and robotics are usually the core of the robot learning field disciplines like cognitive science mathematics social sciences neuroscience biology and electrical engineering have also begun to play a role in it In this way its interdisciplinary character is more than a mere fashion and leads to a productive exchange of ideas One of the aims of EWLR 6 was to foster this exchange of ideas and to further boost contacts between the different scientific areas involved in learning robots EWLR is traditionally a European Workshop on Learning Robots Nevertheless the organizers of EWLR 6 decided to open up the workshop to non European research as well and included in the program committee we known non European researchers This strategy proved to be successful since there was a strong participation in the workshop from researchers outside Europe especially from Japan which provided new ideas and lead to new contacts

Learning how to Study and Work Effectively William Frederick Book, 1926 Information and Learning in Markets Xavier Vives, 2010-01-25 The ways financial analysts traders and other specialists use information and learn from each other are of fundamental importance to understanding how markets work and prices are set This graduate level textbook analyzes how markets aggregate information and examines the impacts of specific market arrangements or microstructure on the aggregation process and overall performance of financial markets Xavier Vives bridges the gap between the two primary views of markets informational efficiency and herding and uses a coherent game theoretic framework to bring together the latest results from the rational expectations and herding literatures Vives emphasizes the consequences of market interaction and social learning for informational and economic efficiency He looks closely at information aggregation mechanisms progressing from simple to complex environments from static to dynamic models from competitive to strategic agents and from simple market strategies such as noncontingent orders or quantities to complex ones like price contingent orders or demand schedules Vives finds that contending theories like informational efficiency and herding build on the same principles of Bayesian decision making and that irrational agents are not needed to explain herding behavior booms and crashes As this book shows the microstructure of a market is the crucial factor in the informational efficiency of prices Provides the most complete analysis of the ways markets aggregate information Bridges the gap between the rational expectations and herding literatures Includes exercises with solutions Serves both as a graduate textbook and a resource for researchers including financial analysts
